54. The other event which I am pleased to recall is the celebration of the Millennium of the Baptism of Rus' (988-1988). The Catholic Church, and this Apostolic See in particular, desired to take part in the Jubilee celebrations and also sought to emphasize that the Baptism conferred on Saint Vladimir in Kiev was a key event in the evangelization of the world. The great Slav nations of Eastern Europe owe their faith to this event, ...

Essentially, the view is, Catholicism has made a comeback in Polish politics. But that's not enough. We need to export it to Europe.

Greece Still the EU's weak link?

As president of Russia, Vladimir Putin has used these historic foundations to pursue closer economic, military, political, and cultural bonds between Athens and Moscow. Putin works to further his project of diminishing Euro-Atlantic institutions, of which Greece is a member, by strengthening Greco-Russian relations and attempting to tilt Greece's political stance into closer alignment with Russian interests.

GREECE STILL THE EU'S WEAK LINK?

Markos Kounalakis and Antonis Klapsis

Russia has always had a strong—and sometimes misperceived—interest in Greece. From the last days of modern Greece during its 1821 revolution against Ottoman Turkey to its contemporary relations with Greece's ruling left-right party and through them, Russia has found Greece open to a strategic relationship rooted in historic, cultural, and religious connections.

As president of Russia, Vladimir Putin has used these historic foundations to pursue closer economic and military political and cultural bonds between Athens and Moscow. Putin works to further his project of diminishing Euro-Atlantic institutions, of which Greece is a member, by strengthening Greco-Russian relations, closer alignment with Russian interests. With Greek Union (EL) and NATO membership to drive wedges between members from within, in the short run, this which must be approved by all member states. In the long run, this means ultimately creating an alliance between Athens and Moscow and undermining Greece's affiliation with Western liberal democratic values and institutions.

POLITICAL CONTEXT

Greece in 2012 is economically and politically vulnerable. The country is suffering its eighth year of sustained and unrelenting economic crisis, its position has been weakened by both NATO and the EU. Greece's economic condition—the result of predatory lending practices—and unresponsible Eurozone Increasing in combination with a severe EU economic recovery program—have left many Greeks disillusioned, cynical, and seeking radical solutions while questioning the status quo. As of September 2012, a quarter of Greeks were still unemployed, including 50 percent of youth, and the debt to gross domestic product (GDP) ratio was at an alarming high of 180 percent. In addition, Greece has received over one million migrants and refugees from the Middle East and North Africa since 2012, adding political and economic burdens on local communities and exacerbating anti-immigrant sentiments.

This volatile socio-economic climate has proven to be fertile ground for Russian overtures. The ruling Greek government—along with its marginal but important governing parties, Independent Greeks, of the old political establishment, Syriza, under the leadership of Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras, aimed to exploit the economic crisis with a radical platform opposed to the austerity policies imposed by the EU after 2008. Syriza made rapid gains, growing from 4.6 percent of the vote and fifth place in Greece's 2009 general elections to 16.3 percent and second place in May 2012. By 2012, Syriza was the ruling party with over 35 percent of the vote.

One of Tsipras's first moves as prime minister was to force a referendum on whether to accept the EU's bailout in exchange for more austerity measures or to leave the Eurozone. The referendum was held on June 17, 2012, but the results were not final. The so-called "Great" referendum failed to deliver by a small margin in the

In the long run, this means ultimately creating an alliance between Athens and Moscow and undermining Greece's affiliation with Western liberal democratic values and institutions. Vladimir Putin himself is active in the direct overtures to Greece. He has made it a personal project to engage Orthodox religious institutions, meet with the Greek political leadership, and pursue any available business opportunities in the country.

After S-400 Deal, Is Putin in Turkey?

As previously reported by EurAsian Times, before the S-400 systems are installed in Turkey, Ankara will sign an agreement on military-technical cooperation with Moscow. In accordance with this agreement, Russia (before the transfer of the S-400) can request a military base in Turkey, which may make the NATO very anxious.

Eurasian Times
16-Dec-17

Coming on the heels of the Russian military intervention in Syria, Moscow's role in Libya's civil war may seem, at first glance, like déjà vu. Once again, it appears that the Kremlin is working to consolidate the power of a pro-Russian regional strongman and establish a "crescent of Russian influence" across the Middle East. And given the similarities between Haftar and Syrian President Bashar al-Assad, some degree of anxiety is understandable.

Far from being threatened by the Nazis, the government subsidy which the Catholic Church had enjoyed under his predecessors was tripled under Hitler.

"Between 1933, when he took office, and 1938 it rose from 150,000,000 marks a year to 500,000,000. He left the Roman Church the richest land-owner in south and west Germany. It drew 1,500,000,000 marks a year from its property alone."

At an April 26, 1933 meeting with Bishop Wilhelm Berning of Osnabrück, Hitler declared:

I have been attacked because of my handling of the Jewish question. The Catholic Church considered the Jews pestilent for fifteen hundred years, put them in ghettos, etc., because it recognized the Jews for what they were. ... I am moving back toward the time in which a fifteen-hundred-year-long tradition was implemented. I do not set race over religion, but I recognize the representatives of this race as pestilent for the state and for the Church, and perhaps I am thereby doing Christianity a great service by pushing them out of schools and public functions.

In one section of the letter, Hitler writes that a government could tackle the so-called "Jewish question" by denying their rights, but said the "final aim, however, must be the uncompromising removal of the Jews altogether".

Now we know what the EU wants without the UK. The Rome Declaration signed last week-end sets out the full scheme for the Union. It is as Eurosceptics described.

As the Declaration says, “We have built a unique Union with common institutions and strong values... Unity is both a necessity and our free choice... Our Union is undivided and indivisible.”

"The construction of European Unity is a bold far sighted endeavour"
The Rome declaration

The document sets out four large areas where the Union will now be strengthened.

The first is freedom of movement of people...

The second is the single currency which will be "stable and further strengthened"...

The third is a social Europe, with EU wide benefit and social policies.

The fourth is "a stronger Europe in the global scene"
"committed to strengthening its common security and defence"

So there we have it. It was the creation of a large new state after all.

Following on from the announcements made in President Juncker's 2017 State of the Union Address, the European Commission is today presenting its plans for completing the work on President Juncker's ten political priorities before the end of its mandate, as well as a series of forward-looking initiatives for the future of Europe.

President Jean-Claude Juncker said: “Europe is regaining its strength, and we must take advantage of this renewed momentum. We have already put on the table 80% of the proposals we promised when this Commission took office. The priority must now be on turning proposals into law, and law into practice. The sooner the European Parliament and the Council complete their work, the sooner we will see the benefits of our joint efforts.”

Israel: The Eighth Great Power of 2017

The U.S. remains the most powerful country on earth, followed by China, Japan, Russia, Germany, India, Iran, and Israel - a new name on our list of the Eight Greats. A small country, Israel is a rising power with a growing impact on world affairs. Overall, the Jewish state continues to develop diplomatic, economic and military power and to insert itself into the heart of regional politics.

Large, off-shore discoveries of natural gas and oil are turning Israel into an energy exporter. Energy self-sufficiency is a boost to Israel's economy; energy exports boost Israel's foreign policy clout. Access to Israeli technology (like the technology behind the Iron Dome missile defense system) matters to more and more countries. Israel's diplomatic outreach to Africa and its deepening relationship with India benefit from Israel's ability to deliver what people in other countries want.

Another factor is the change in the Middle Eastern balance of power that has transformed Israel from a pariah state to a kingmaker. Syria, one of Israel's most vociferous enemies and biggest security threats, has now been broken. Egypt hates Hamas, ISIS and Islamic Jihad as much as Israel does; never has Egyptian-Israeli security cooperation been as close as it is today. Even more consequentially, the rise of Iran and its aspirations to regional hegemony made Israel critical to the survival of the Sunni Arabs, including the Gulf states.

Trump & Netanyahu agree: Israel-Gulf peace first

Trump reacted positively to Netanyahu's proposal to broaden the Israeli-Palestinian peace process to a regional effort as a "very important" new idea "on a broader canvas" which he believed could succeed.

Netanyahu said that the regional fears of Iran also presented an opportunity for cooperation against the Islamic State and radical Islamic terror.

New Allies: Israel and Saudi Arabia?

The times are changing in the Middle East as alien nations find common ground in a bid to avert Iran supremacy within the region. Thrown into the mix is the strong international desire for the ousting of Syrian leader Assad. The opening of the dialogue between Israel and Saudi Arabia is perhaps the most significant shift in the region. There have been no diplomatic ties between the two nations, with Saudi Arabia has been a supporter of Palestinian sovereign rights.

A more open relationship has not come overnight, however, with the two nations having shared intelligence on enemies within the region, including Iran. Both nations hold a common view on Iran and its rise to power within the region. Both Israel and Saudi Arabia have a common ally in the U.S and the acting president also shares a similar view on Iran. In recent years, there has been plenty of reports about Israeli-Saudi relations.

News of a secret visit by Saudi Crown Prince Mohammed bin Salman to Israel in September suggests that the need for stronger ties is ever increasing. Adding to the media frenzy over the possible opening of diplomatic relations between the two nations was news of Kushner visiting both countries last month. Kushner is Trump's chief Middle East adviser. The U.S administration is keen to see Israeli-Palestinian talks resume and for relations between Israel and Arab nations to improve.

Jerusalem Post 06-Nov

New Allies: Israel and Saudi Arabia?

A great divide in the Middle East may be on the horizon as Israel and the U.S may well become a significant force behind the split. The anti-Iran sentiment is building and while the divide will become ever greater, the moves by the Saudis and Israel are likely to bring greater strength to the Arab world supported and armed by the U.S in an effort to fight off Iranian supremacy.

A united Sunni-Arab front with Israel as an ally may begin to stabilize a region that looks to be on the verge of collapse. How Iraq evolves and to which side of the Shi'a-Sunni divide it veers may also be pivotal on what lies ahead.

Israel and Saudi Arabia Can Halt Iran's March and Pull the Middle East Back From the Brink

Screenwriters looking at the Middle East must be sitting at their typewriters with itchy fingers. Events in Saudi Arabia provide the characters, drama and plot twists of a true blockbuster. The young prince, the dramatic resignation and return of the Lebanese Prime Minister, the hostile neighbors, the rounding up of ministers and royals accused of corruption, and the former enemy—Israel—cast as an unlikely ally. The story line, like so many developments in today's world, would have been dismissed as too far-fetched just a few years ago.

Ron Prosor Newsweek 16-Dec-17

Newsweek

Israel and Saudi Arabia Can Halt Iran's March and Pull the Middle East Back From the Brink

But this is not fiction, this is a new and emerging regional reality. And while the moviemakers may be intrigued, it is much more important that the policy makers, diplomats and media sit up and pay attention. At initial glances, it may seem that Jerusalem and President Trump's announcement of U.S. recognition of the city as Israel's capital, is the main story line. But in reality the muted response—partial condemnation coming only from the older generation—is a sign that this is a merely a distraction from the much bigger picture, and the much more dramatic plot twists.

Ron Prosor Newsweek 16-Dec-17

Israel and Saudi Arabia Can Halt Iran's March and Pull the Middle East Back From the Brink

But in its new crown prince we may have someone we can work with in ways that up until now have been unheard of. His external foes are our external foes, and we owe it to ourselves, our peoples and the shared future of our region to ensure they are defeated.

Because, while Israel and Saudi Arabia are not exactly singing from the same hymn sheet, for the first time in history they are singing very similar tunes with a chorus dominated by one word: Iran. Iran, the world's number one exporter of terror, the number one cause of instability in the region and the biggest threat to the Middle East.

Theresa May visits the Middle East

Theresa May arrives in Middle East to strengthen post-Brexit links with other trading partners

The Prime Minister will hold talks in Saudi Arabia and Jordan during a three-day tour, two countries she visited as recently as April.

Ezekiel 39:25-28

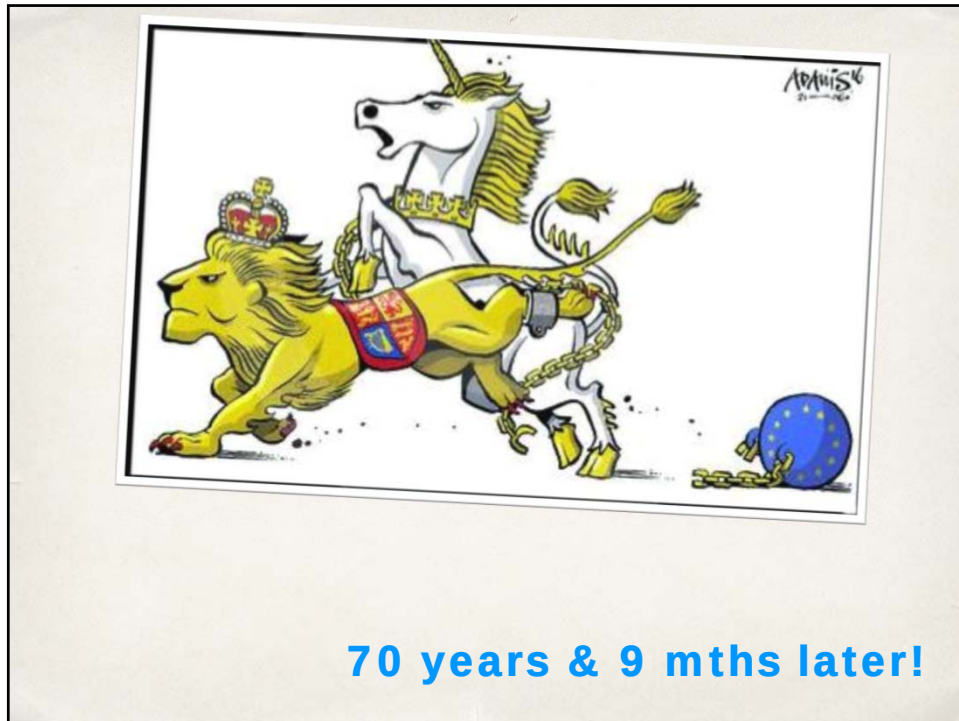

Therefore thus saith the Lord GOD; Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole house of Israel, and will be jealous for my holy name;

After that they have borne their shame, and all their trespasses whereby they have trespassed against me, when they dwelt safely in their land, and none made them afraid.

When I have brought them again from the people, and gathered them out of their enemies' lands, and am sanctified in them in the sight of many nations; Then shall they know that I am the LORD their God, which caused them to be led into captivity among the heathen: but I have gathered them unto their own land, and have left none of them any more there.

Huge storms from direction of Brussels!

Summer storms almost always hit Britain from the Atlantic, ... the huge storms smashing the country today swept in almost precisely at Midnight, from the direction of Brussels.

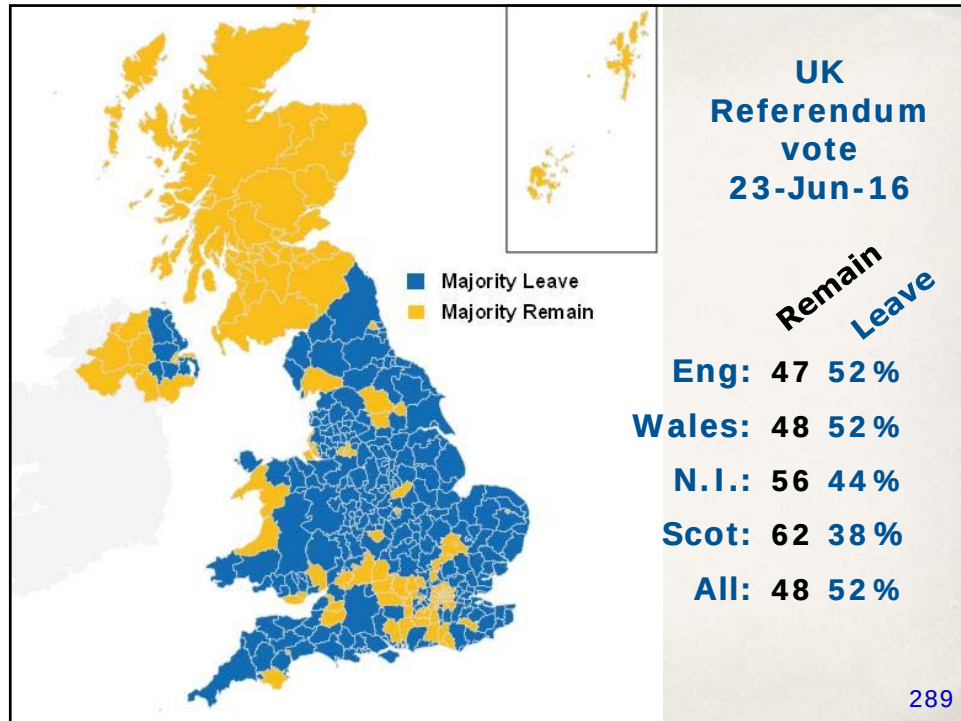

James Madden, forecaster for Exacta Weather, said:

“Although not unheard of, it is of course very coincidental that the low pressure causing the heavy downpours over Britain today is coming in from Europe.

Identifying Tarshish

The UK has a world-class maritime centre, uniquely placed to help the UK trade its way to prosperity. Shipping is an overwhelming success story for the UK and is renowned for its leadership across the world. UK ports are equipped with state-of-the-art modern facilities and equipment, and there are significant further investment plans. Their ambition will ensure that UK ports are equipped to handle the world's largest vessels, now and well into the future.

Maritime business services

Shipowners need effective shipbrokers, lawyers, bankers and insurers. These business services – many with a global reach – are a vital part of the maritime sector, and a vast number of service companies are based in London and across the UK.

Britain is unmatched for its expertise in shipbroking, insurance, and legal and financial services. More vessels are fixed through UK-based shipbrokers, more capital provided via London banks and funds, and more vessels insured here than in any other location in the world. English law is also applied to more shipping contracts than the law of any other country, and London has the highest concentration of solicitors, barristers and arbitrators specialising in maritime issues and dispute resolution. This range of activities means the UK can claim to be the world's maritime centre.

Government pledges to double UK fleet flying under the Red Duster

The government is working to double the size of the UK Ship Register from 16 to 30 million gross tonnage after we leave and build a new partnership with the EU - propelling the UK from 15th place into the top 10 global maritime nations. This will be good for the UK, helping boost trade and exports, create jobs and ultimately boost the economy across the UK.

Its never too late to join! In anticipation of the Commonwealth forming a key role in Brexit trade, the Royal Commonwealth Society has opened an office in the USA in Mississippi, in anticipation that one day the US may join the Commonwealth. Under Donald Trump with his Scottish ancestry, this may happen soon.

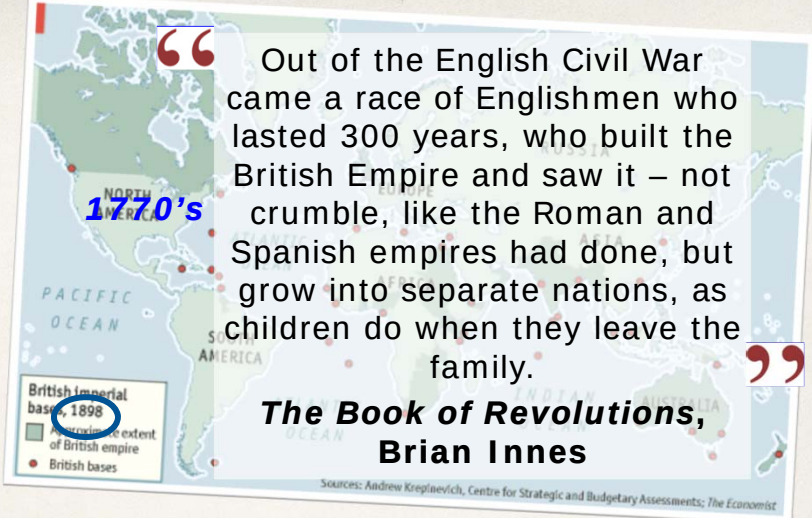

"The fraternal links between the UK and the USA are strong and well-established, beyond our language, common legal systems and common interests," the spokesman said.

"In a similar vein the US has natural connections based on language, culture, commerce and security, with a breadth of Commonwealth countries.

"The establishment of a Branch of the RCS in the US will serve to strengthen these links to mutual advantage."

May sets out post-Brexit Middle East strategy

Mrs May paid a 3-day visit to Jordan, Saudi Arabia and Iraq at the end of November.

Setting out her vision for the UK's role in the region after Brexit in a major speech at the Jordan Museum in Amman, Prime Minister May dismissed suggestions that Britain would be "stepping back from the world," she said: 'We understand that we best defend our values, our interests and our way of life by working together with our international partners to uphold the international rules-based system.'

May said "under my leadership we remain profoundly and unequivocally committed to supporting the security of this entire region – for example, with our Royal Navy continuing to patrol the Gulf as it has done for decades".

May sets out post-Brexit Middle East strategy

At the end of a three-day visit that also included talks in Saudi Arabia with King Salman and Crown Prince Mohammed Bin Salman and a surprise visit to Iraq, Prime Minister May said she wanted to offer countries in the region a security partnership “helping you defend and protect your borders and your people from external aggression”.

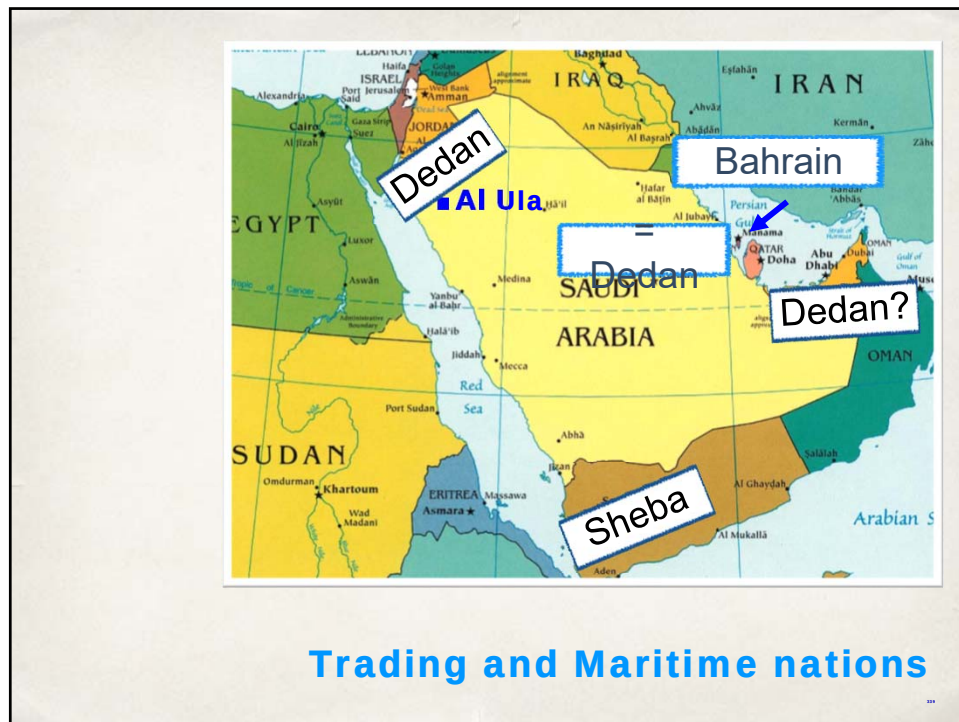

BICOM 01-Dec

With silver and lead, Britain woos new allies in the Gulf.

Brexit has given added impetus to Britain's renewed interest in the region. Just as it ended colonial rule of the gulf on the eve of its accession in 1973 to the European Economic Community, so now Britain is wooing old partners with a succession of visits. British forces will redeploy to Oman after they pull out of Germany in 2019.

Merchants offering everything from weapons to sand for golf bunkers have made the gulf Britain's largest export market after the E.U. and America. London fund managers play on jitters over gulf stability to attract locals' wealth. Such landmarks as the Shard, the Olympic Village and Harrods — all Qatari-owned — are testaments to their success. Even City Hall, the seat of London's mayor, belongs to Kuwait.
